TURKISH DELIGHT

Lokum, widely known as Turkish delight, is a traditional Ottoman specialty. The word lokum is an abbreviation of rahat-ul hulkum which means “that which relaxes the throat.” Once known only within the borders of the Ottoman Empire lokum was served in special occasions and served as an invaluable gift. It transcended the borders of the Empire in the 18th century and was brought to Europe by a British explorer. The secret of its unique taste and flavor lies in patience. It has to be stirred and cooked until it gains consistency, which requires 2.5 to 3 hours. After it is cooked, lokum is poured in special moulds, then cut to pieces and becomes ready to be enjoyed.

HALVA

Another famous Turkish dessert is halva; deriving from the Arabic word “halwa”, meaning sweet. The halva is cooked with care and patience, consistently producing exquisite tastes. The primary ingredient of traditional plain halva is tahini (crushed sesame). As there isn't any preservative the oil (sesame oil) on the halva can be observed in a hot environment.
